The median Amazon worker was paid $28,446 last year, according to company filings, which translates to about $13.68 an hour.

“Not only does this make a difference in the lives of hundreds of thousands of Amazon employees, it also sends a message to the fast food industry, the airline industry and the retail industry in general that the time is now to begin paying workers a living wage,” he said.

Thank you Sen Sanders. We're excited about this, and also hope others will join in. <https://t.co/kasWkkOhWo>

In its announcement Tuesday, Amazon said it would lobby for an increase in the federal minimum wage, which has been $7.25 for a decade. The online giant is the country's second-largest private employer, behind Walmart. Last month it became the country's second publicly traded company to be valued at more than $1 trillion.

Other companies also have moved to raise wages as the unemployment rate, currently 3.9 percent, falls to historic lows. Target announced earlier this year that it would raise its starting wage to $12 an hour with a plan to increase it to $15 by 2020. Facebook also boosted its minimum wage for its contracted workforce - janitorial staff, food-service workers and other similar staff - to $15 an hour, while Costco now pays $14 an hour.

In exchange for higher pay, Amazon said it would stop giving workers shares of company stock as part of their compensation package. “We've heard from our...employees that they prefer the predictability and immediacy of cash” to restricted stock units, the company said in a statement on Tuesday.
